

As I understand it, the federal government is considering enacting legislation that could affect Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law (aka The No Call List). I can appreciate states that have not enacted their own law, who may be eager for such legislation to be passed. In the case of Indiana however, from my perspective as an Indiana resident, our state's Telephone Privacy Law has been working very well. I registered my telephone number with our Attorney General's Office earlier this year and for the first time in many many years, I'm no longer troubled with telemarketers imposing on my family life. I implore you to be cautious with any legislation imposed so that states have an opportunity if you will to opt out of protection under the federal law if the state wishes to maintain protection under their own state law. I appreciate the opportunity to address the FCC in this matter.
